

Dear TechFirm,

I am writing to submit my application for the web developer position. My experience developing web applications for multiple platforms and marketing those would make me a strong addition to your team.

While earning my B.S. in Business with a concentration in information systems and operations management at the University of Oregon I got my feet wet in web design. After that I launched a series of commercial websites using ASP.Net, SQL Server, Windows Server, and IIS. I eventually turned that work into a fulltime job doing search engine optimization for an online auto parts retailer where I learned PHP so that my methods could be applied to their sites. I then began developing my own sites using custom Wordpress themes and autoblogging software in LAMP environments.

My marketing experience includes getting multiple websites national publicity within their first month of launch using press release marketing, Google Adwords, YouTube, organic search, and RSS driven social media accounts. Adding me to your team will significantly increase the ability of your firm to get notices for any innovative idea while at the same time being able to capitalize on that with good SEO, reduced costs through efficient automation, and a unique ability to think outside the box.

I can best be reached via email or at 503-232-3080 and I look forward to hearing from you. Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

Cyrus Sullivan

Dear LawFirm,

I am writing to submit a somewhat unorthodox application for your legal assistant position. As you can see by my attached resume, my work history is that of a web developer, but I believe as do my lawyers that I would make a good legal assistant.

After launching a lawful, yet controversial, online business I was targeted for prosecution by members of Congress, celebrities, the FBI, and of course the United States Attorney's Office (USAO). When I was sentenced, the judge said that my business was perfectly legal, but that I had committed a crime with a computer and could legally be banned from them. I have been fighting my case ever since. In the process, I have learned that I am often more capable at representing myself than some lawyers.

As an inmate, I challenged my conviction under 28 U.S.C. 2255 for ineffective assistance of counsel and obtained a certificate of appealability from the District Court. After being released last May I filed a pro se motion to modify the conditions of my release so that I could use computers and to appoint counsel. The judge granted the motion, but also granted an employment restriction motion filed by the USAO. I am challenging the employment restriction in the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals. Even though I am now represented by counsel they rely heavily on case law that I researched in prison using Lexis Nexis. My lawyers and I believe that my legal successes under extreme circumstances would make me a good addition to any law firm. I believe that my experience creating legal policies capable of withstanding scrutiny from high profile attorneys would make me a good addition to your law firm.

I can best be reached via email or at 503-232-3080. I look forward to hearing from you as I continue my legal battles that also include a pro se trademark infringement suit and a likely police brutality suit against correctional officers in Victorville. Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

Dear Company,

The purpose of this letter is to explain why I am on federal supervision. In 2012 I ran a successful and lawful business that was targeted by law enforcement for helping people speak out against those they have issues with including the police. Eventually a stalker working with the police provoked me into sending a threatening email. They then threw the book at me as a means of circumventing the First Amendment.

I was banned from computers for a while, but I never gave up my fight to use them and eventually won my right to use computers back. Unfortunately, that was followed by a new ban on my business under a different statute and while I fight that ban in the Court of Appeals I am seeking work. It is my hope that I will find something I enjoy more than my old business so that I will not want to run it again if I win my appeal. It is my hope that this case will be resolved in such a manner that you will never have to worry about losing your business if you lose your temper under very understandable circumstances on the job. While I fight for our rights I seek not your moral support, but just a job and in return I will give you may all and you will acquire advanced skills at a not so advanced price, as well as as up to $5,000 in federal bonding.

I can best be reached via email or at 503-232-3080 and I look forward to hearing from you. Thank you for your time.

Dear Prospective Employer,

I am writing to submit my application for the Wordpress developer position advertised on Craigslist. I have considerable experience building websites and getting them noticed. Although primarily a .Net developer, I have worked quite a bit with Wordpress over the years as part of my business and a previous job.

I am currently working on a niche search engine that mines social media for specific types of comments before auto-posting them to Wordpress. In the past I ran several Wordpress sites as part of my business for which I built custom themes using Artisteer and custom SEO code that eliminated SEO deficiencies common in Wordpress. My previous work history includes doing SEO work on Wordpress sites exclusively that also involved creating original content, posting site content to social media accounts automatically using web services, and creating original product feeds capable of adding an unlimited number of products to Google Products and other online marketplaces.

I am currently working on research and development for my own projects while seeking work in the Portland area. I thank you for your time and look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

Cyrus Sullivan
